A Little Something About The Silly Game

I love to create games. One day my two very young daughters said, "Why don't you make a game we can play?" So, I thought it'd be fun to create a game together that we could all play. I gave them some coins for their playing pieces, and found a die to get us started. One of my daughters preferred to use a doll shoe for her playing piece instead, and then my other daughter had to find something to be her piece. We started with a bunch of round circles on the board for spaces, and then linked them together with a single line that made a loop. Written in each circle was something that a player had to do when they landed on it. The game didn't have much color with just the circles with words in them, and so I got some crayons and they added some color to the circles and the board, which they enjoyed doing and also made the game a lot cooler looking. We had a lot of fun creating and playing the game that we called the silly game.

I made a small revision since the first game, but the idea behind the game is still there. Now there are four categories designated by four shapes. Circle-make a face, Square-make a sound or noise, Triangle-do an activity, and Star-make believe you are something. Players move their pieces around the board and do what the spaces say to score that shape. There is a picture in with each shae that goes along with the activity. The first player to score two of each of the four shapes wins the game.

What Is Needed To Play The Game

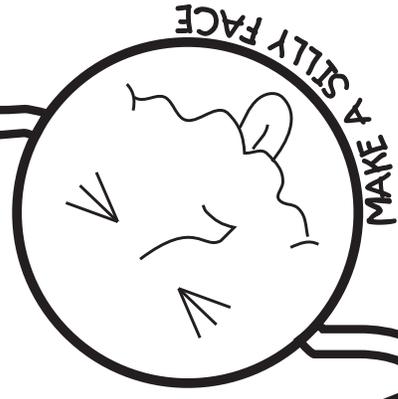

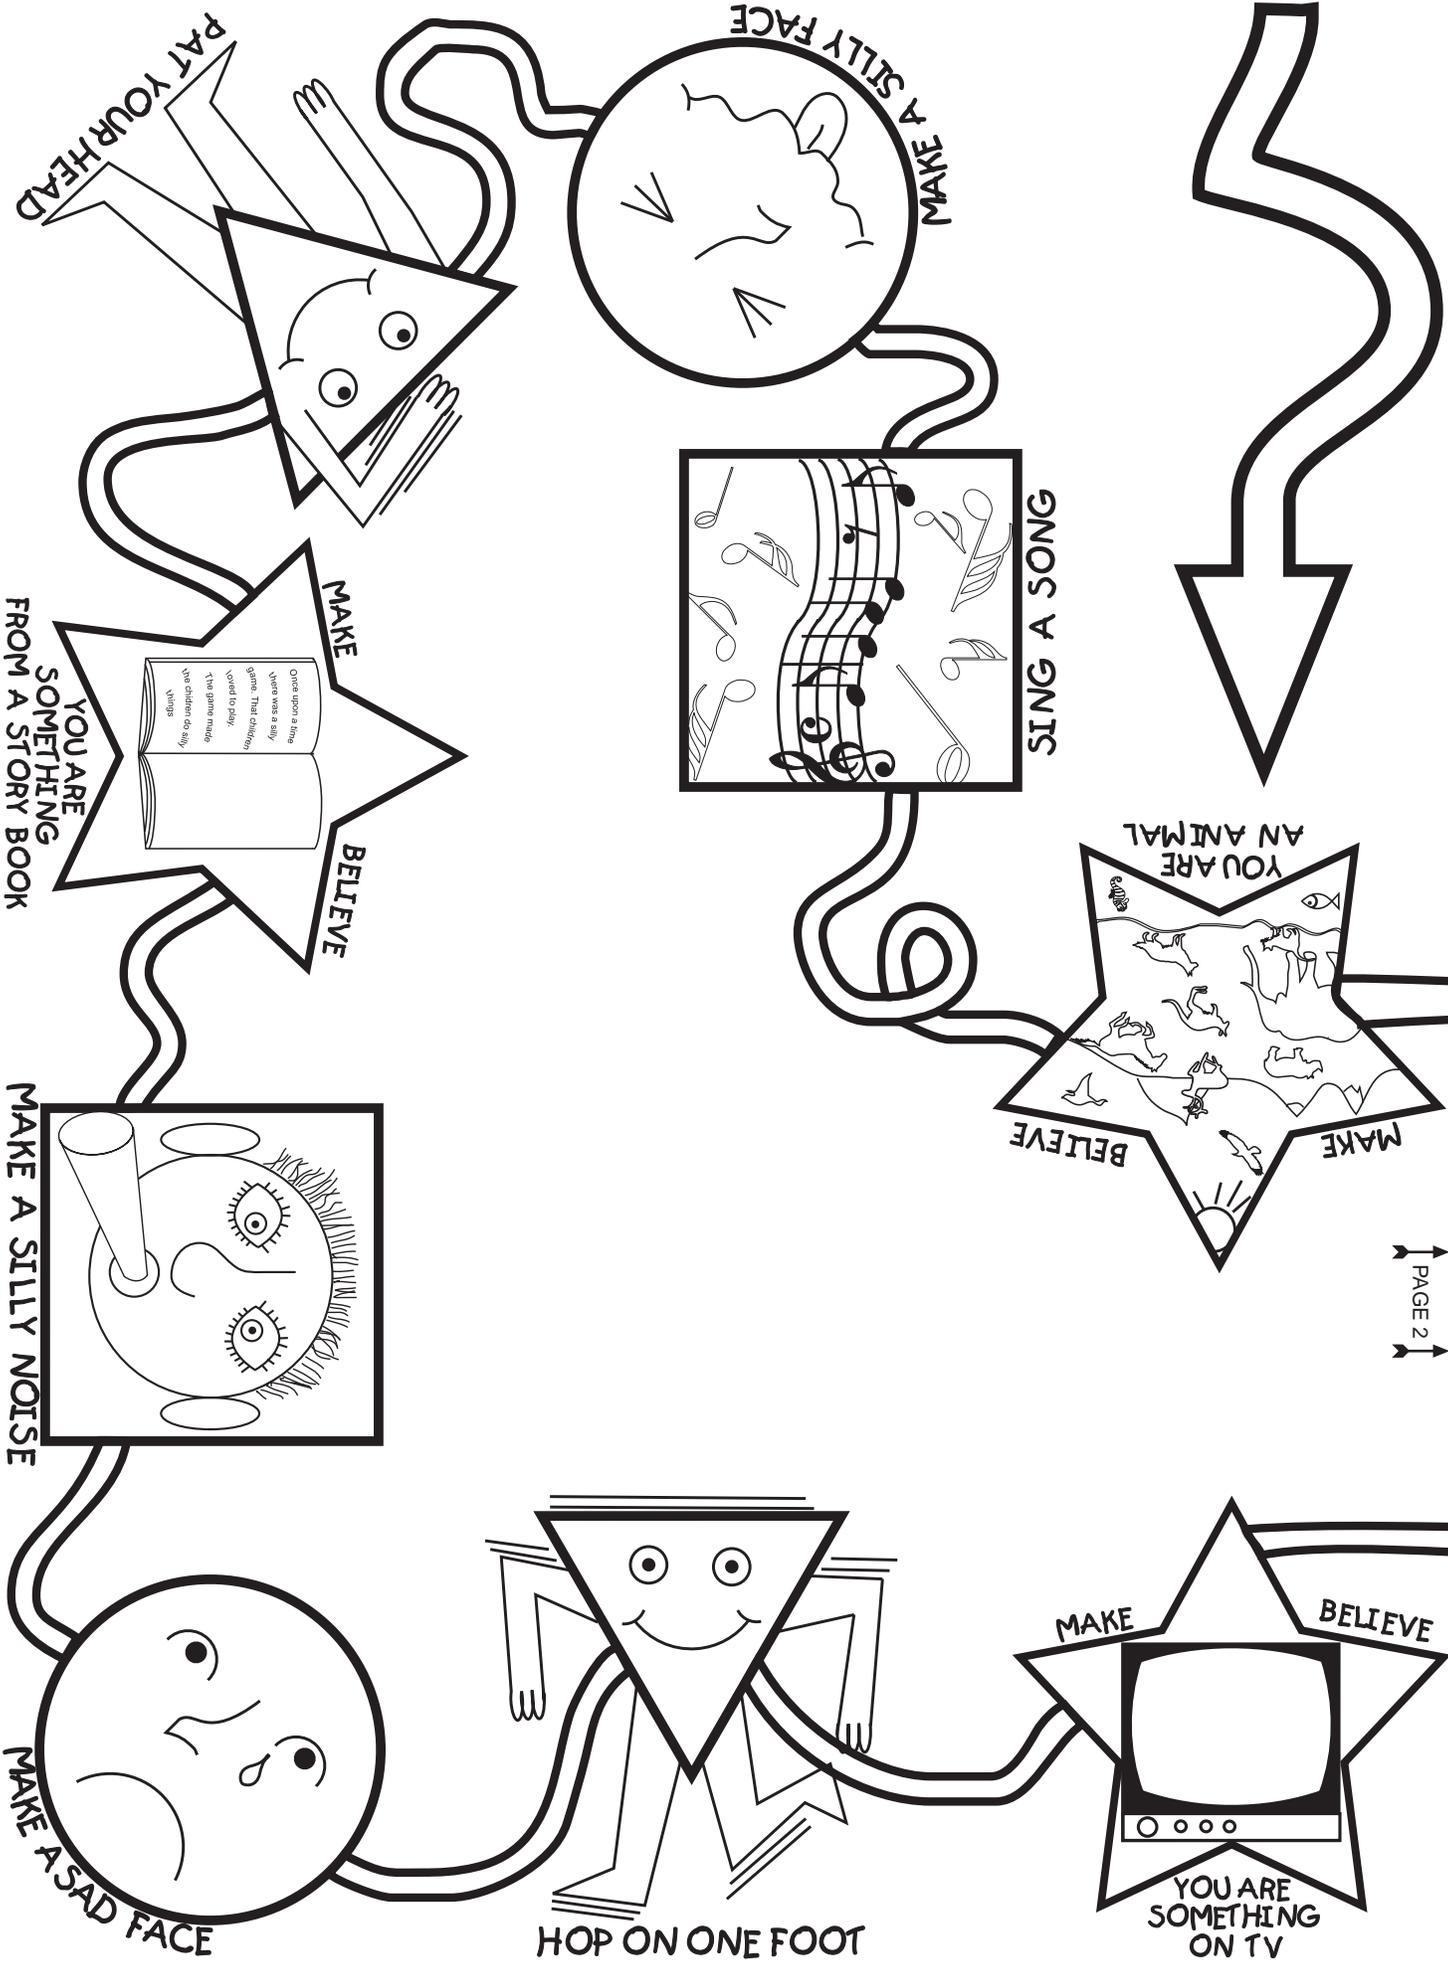

The 3 pages of the game board. Crayons, to color in the game. A single standard d6 die. A playing piece, to mark where on the board a player is. Players can use anything that they want to as long as it fits on the spaces. Some suggestions: a doll's shoe, a little green army man, a coin. If your children are like mine, there is something somewhere on the floor that they can use. Each player will also need a pen or pencil and paper, to keep score.

Let's Get Started

- 1) Tape the 3 pages that make up the board together.
- 2) The crayons are used to color in the game. This does not have to be done right away and can be done anytime, or not at all. This is just to give the game some color and make it more personal. It's also a lot of fun to do.
- 3) Players look for something to be their game piece and then place it on any one of the spaces. This is just a starting point, players don't have to do what the space says yet, but they can if they want to. Players don't have to start on the same space, but you can if you want.
- 4) One of the players rolls the die and moves her playing piece that many spaces in either direction. She then does what the space she landed on says to do. Example: Make a Silly Face. After she does what the space says then she draws that shape on her score paper.
- 5) The next player rolls the die and moves and play continues until someone wins.
- 6) The first player to have at least two of each of the four shapes on her score paper wins. These rules are just a guide and may be changed if you so desire. Laugh, be silly and have fun.
